National Law Day Symposium

"Constitution for Commons"

Our Constitution turns 72 and is celebrated since years. This can be the right time to revisit our Constitution and what it means for our citizens today. What do constitutional principles mean for the public at large? Does it matter? How does it affect our daily life? Whether there is balance between rights and responsibilities? We discuss these at the occasion of 'Constitution Day' on 26th November. Its interface with various important aspects of society. In case of legislators, from 'rule of law' to scope for enacting special laws the constitution enables them with sanctity. All of these needs discussion at a time when we face new socio-legal challenges. Constitution is practiced not only by advocates in courts, but also by police and the journalists in the society. In this symposium, we seek broad views on usage and importance of our Constitution by advocates, journalists and police personnel.
