Dear Parent / Student,

Greetings from Lloyd academic community!

Course Preface :: State v. Personal Liberty

Individual liberty and State interest are at times perceived to be at odds with one another, be it civil, criminal or commercial law. The criminal courts (dealing with conventional crimes – rape, murder, theft or deep seated economic frauds) have quite often been confronted with the task of preserving a proper balance between safeguarding individual liberty and effective administration of criminal justice system, while evaluating the evidence available. Be it Aryan Khan's Bail, Parambir's Special Leave Petition, Ashish Mishra's Cancellation of Bail or Vinod Dua's Quashing Petition, this is a persistent challenge which this Course aims to effectively highlight with case law discussions while upholding the true spirit and ideals of Constitution of India.

The Social Contract Theory is a classic bargain, wherein individuals trade their liberty in lieu of the State granting them rights and protection. The State, as a guardian of the society has been assigned the role of ensuring public order and tranquility by prescribing a code of conduct which is perceived as harm not only to the individual, but also to the society as a whole. The State's criminal justice system is aimed at preventing crime and punishing such deviant behaviour with the help of various functionaries, such as the investigation authorities (Police), public prosecutors, courts, defence counsels, prison authorities, etc. Unlike a civil wrong, which is considered to be a conflict between two parties safeguarding their individual interest, a criminal justice system undertakes to resolve a conflict between the State and the accused.

The State functionaries have been given wide powers to ensure that the accused is punished and the aggrieved is served justice. In pursuing this objective, however, courts are required to address two competing interests. On one hand, criminal justice system is required to adopt effective measures to combat crime, which curtails the individual liberty of the accused. In order to ensure that there is a balance between the State's compelling interest and individual rights of those whose liberties are at stake, the principles of fair trial (Triple Test of Bails) have been designed and widely accepted by every country. It is designed to protect individuals from the unlawful and arbitrary curtailment or deprivation of their basic rights and freedoms, the most prominent of which are the right to life and liberty of the person, especially while focusing on special laws like the Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act, 1985 Unlawful Activities (Prevention) Act, 1967.

Gone are the days when a weapon at a crime scene was considered as the sole concrete evidence in settling a case. The candid power vested in a piece of evidence to prove or disprove a factum for instance if an accused is guilty or not, or if a will is genuine or not, is what makes it crucial for lawyers to win cases! Many lawyers agree that 'finding proof' is a challenging task. However, it is also extremely important to know what serves as evidence and how the evidence is presented and examined in a Court of Law. This because evidence proves facts and sans the facts, we cannot apply the law to a case at hand.

Course Objective ::

In light of the aforesaid overview, this practice certificate course is designed with the objectives to:-

- Develop understanding of the competing interests at the intersection of State and individual liberty during the functioning of criminal justice system and evaluating the relevant evidentiary material;
- Understand the interplay between State and individual liberty during the functioning of criminal justice system;
- Understand the safeguards for individual liberty of accused and convicts during various stages of criminal proceeding and appreciate the principles of the Indian Evidence Act;
- Apply the interplay between State and individual liberty to preventive detention laws with a focus on general and special criminal legislations.
